Hi guys! I am currently writing a comprehensive review paper on nanomaterials. I really want to include some custom illustrations for publications to show how the nanoparticles interact with cellular membranes. Does anyone know of a good workflow or service to get high-quality graphics done quickly?

Review papers definitely benefit the most from high-quality custom graphics. It keeps readers engaged and makes your paper much more likely to be cited. I used to try to draw everything myself using basic tools, but the results were always a bit disappointing. For my last review, I decided to look into professional options and found Ella Maru Studio <https://scientific-illustrations.com>. They focus on creating stunning scientific images and animations specifically for academic papers. Their artists actually have scientific backgrounds, so they understand exactly what a nanoparticle looks like without you having to explain the basic science to them. It saved me a ton of time and the final figures looked like they belonged on the cover of a major journal. It is definitely worth checking out!
